New-born baby rescued from suicide

Brave action by helpers, sister will provide nursing, party in good health

After several days of stationary surveillance the one-week old Samiran could be relieved from the Hanusch-hospital in Penzing. The infant was taken to hospital by relatives on tuesday night after having tried to enter his mothers birth canal with an umbilical cord around his neck. In an emergency operation a swiftly assembled rescue team managed to rescue the boy out of his precareous situation. „His state is well, regarding the circumstances. A weight of 3280 g and a height of 52 cm do not provoke anxiety“, a hospital staff reported. According to well-informed sources the mother's actual state is sound but she is yet a bit weakened from hosting the potential suicidee. Though this decision was discussed controversially, both were relieved from hospital on Saturday. The decision was facilitated by three-year old Tamuna's – the baby's sister – promise to aid in nursing. After full convalescence the family will head to Berlin for a longer stay.
